

Is Obama a good liar or a bad liar?

This one is a difficult one.

And I'm not even talking about the most blatant lies that Liberals find funny and sweep under the carpet of oblivion. Like when he said that his parents met during a march in Selma (although this took place three years AFTER he was born); or that he visited "57 states"; or that his mother fought against insurance companies not knowing if her illness was covered; or that his grandfather liberated Auschwitz. No, I am talking about the more subtle ones; the ones that should be obvious but he manages to spin in a way that they seem less so. In a way, we could argue that he is a bad liar.

One only needs to hear a speech of his, any speech, or watch a press conference filled with softballs tossed at him by the lapdog media, or listen to his campaign messages (still going on, or did they ever stop?), to realize that almost everything he says is either a half truth or an outright lie. And I am being generous by saying "almost". It is easy to read between the lines and to translate his obamata into plain English and see that one thing is what he says and another completely different thing is what he means. One thing is what he promises and a totally different thing is what he intends to deliver.

One could argue that it is easy to understand that the concept of higher taxes is disguised with lies such as "increased revenues" or "shared sacrifice"; that job creators are demonized with false descriptions such as "corporate jet owners", "millionaires and billionaires" and "fat cats".

It should be easy to realize that the only "shovel ready" item in our country is Obama himself. He came into office with the shovel ready to dig us deeper into a hole while blaming anybody he could for his lack of accomplishments, broken promises, and nonexistent leadership. And he is still digging.

People should not have great difficulty to find the inconsistencies between Obama's criticism of Wall Street and his appointment of Geithner to the Treasury or his constant fund-raising functions in New York.

One could say that it is easy to see how Obama's assertion that "80% of the American People agree with what I propose" is just another lie based on ad-hoc polls that are skewed in ways to make such made-up and massaged figures fit his discourse.

It should be really easy to see his demagoguery, his hypocrisy, his arrogance, and his reluctance to take responsibility for anything, especially when he lies about all those things and shoves false mandates like Obamacare; when he lies about working with Republicans only to go after them right away with ad hominem attacks; when he lies and takes credit for the work of others as if he was the leader that is so painfully obvious he is not; or when he says he is "on top of things" when it is evident that he is the last one to take any action on any issue because a round of golf, a vacation or a fund raiser always comes first.

Those factors would make a person that acts and talks that way, that deceives with such cynicism and carelessness, and lies so often and so openly a bad liar, right? But in Obamaland things are never as they seem, because ...

On the other hand, we could also argue that he is a good liar.

One only needs to see how millions upon millions of obamanites parrot his talking points and what is worse, do it completely convinced that they are the holders of the truth because their dear leader says so.

It is painful to see how many millions of Americans refuse to see what lies behind the obamataalk and wholeheartedly and without hesitation buy into the misconceptions that this implies.

It is difficult to understand how so many media outlets act just as an echo chamber for all the false concepts fed to them by the Obama White House and run with these concepts with the undeniable intention to misinform as many Americans as possible.

It is hard to believe that so many people still see him as “one of us” even after suffering through his condescending tone, his patronizing attitude, and his outlandish displays, excesses, and abuses. This is a person that has managed to get away with everything and anything he pleases because he continues to prove to be one of the most effective snake-oil salesmen we have ever witnessed. The double standards with which he operates are astonishing yet he never fails to get a free pass.

His minions are always ready to play his game. Obamanites not only attack anybody that may disagree with the president, but on top of that, they demand that you like him, idolize him. That, or risk being labeled a fascist, and extremist, or a racist. They are ready crucify something as banal as Sarah Palin’s wardrobe costs yet will never mention the Obama campaign’s expenditures on Greek columns, a special seat on his plain with a false presidential logo, or his wife’s lavish European trips (with mother-in-law included and on our dime).

A poor president but a highly effective puppeteer, Obama has succeeded and continues to succeed in deviating public opinion in the direction he chooses (with the ever present help of the media). Like the pied piper of Hamelin he is taking the American People to the river to drown and many are following him blissfully. So I don’t know if Obama is a good liar or a bad liar. The only fact that matters is that he IS a liar and that we are all suffering from it and this is getting worse every day. Like a blogger put it brilliantly the other day:

“For the first time in my adult life, I am truly afraid for my country.”

Rafael Elias

Political Analysis and Economic Studies

July 21, 2011