

Who is (are) the charlatan(s)?

January 5, 2012

David Axelrod, Jim Messina, Valerie Jarrett, Debbie Wasserman Shultz and the rest of the Obama minions should be careful about why they say or risk that their campaign suffers from a “death of a thousand bites of the tongue”. With all the nerve in the world, Obama’s main strategist described Governor Romney as a charlatan without looking at his master’s own record. Lets see.

1.- Stating as a fact something that is impossible to measure, assess or verify such as the argument that “he saved the country from another Great Depression” does not make Obama a truthful person, but a charlatan.

2.- Taking credit for killing Osama Bin Laden after having capitalized on the previous administration’s policies and strategies (which by the way, he condemned in speech yet quietly affirmed in action) does not make Obama a “hawk”. It makes him a charlatan.

3.- Blaming the previous administration for the economic crisis after having been in control of the country for three years (two of which he “governed” with a democratic majority in the House of the Senate) does not make Obama a victim, but a charlatan.

4.- Taking credit for ending the war in Iraq while just following the previous administration’s time table does not make Obama a promise-keeper, but a charlatan.

5.- Blaming Republicans for lack of cooperation while taking every opportunity to attack them in the media does not make Obama a “uniter” nor a “negotiator”, but an uninvolved charlatan.

6.- Declaring himself the “champion of the middle class” while living large surrounded by all kinds of excess and luxuries including his latest $4 million vacation does not make Obama a “man of the people”, but a charlatan.

7.- Controlling and manipulating the media and their message that cover up his multiple flaws and errors while exaggerating his minimal achievements is not being a good communicator. It is being a charlatan.

8.- Having the Chair of the Democratic Party hit the airwaves and declare falsehoods such as “unemployment is not higher now than it was when Obama took office” (as the pathological liar Debbie Wasserman Shultz did) only demonstrates that they are charlatans.

9.- Taking credit for the (sluggish) economic recovery when American businesses grow not because of Obama’s policies but despite them, does not make this president an economic success, but a charlatan.

10.- Demonizing Wall Street and showing support for OWS movements while appointing (and maintaining) one of the architects of the bailout (Tim Geithner) and keeping “too-big-to-fail” banks as donors does not only make Obama a hypocrite, but also a charlatan.

11.- Questioning the credibility of Republican candidates while manipulating data and information to show “accomplishments” during his administration does not only make Obama a person willing to insult our intelligence, but also makes him a charlatan.

12.- Making “recess appointments” like Richard Cordray as Director of the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau, by-passing the congressional process makes Obama an authoritarian, and a charlatan.

13.- Misleading the American People with the misconstruction and manipulation of facts such as Warren Buffet’s tax rate, shovel-ready jobs, “keep-your-doctor” healthcare promises, ... or making up stories like his mother being denied health insurance, his grandfather liberating Auschwitz, or his parents meeting in Selma during a MLK rally, does not make Obama a trustworthy person. That makes him a charlatan.

14.- Having knowledge (at best) or having participated (at worst) in Solyndra and “Operation fast and Furious” and then dismiss them as “non-events” show that this president is not only corrupt, but also a charlatan.

Honestly, there is much more to make the list a lot longer. But the point remains that Obama, Axelrod, Messina, Wasserman Shultz, and of course those who perpetuate these and other lies and myths (like Chris Matthews, Rachel Maddow, Ed Shultz, Randi Rhodes, and even “mainstream” people like Pierce Morgan (shouldn’t he be analyzing British policies instead?), David Gregory, Chistine Amanpour (ditto), George Stephanopoulos, and the rest are all part of the Charlatan Group.

As I said, they better be careful with what they say, as facts and the truth may cause them to suffer the repudiation of an American People that are gradually waking up to the wide array of Obama lies.
